I recommend Final Cut Pro X for Mac users with a one time payment (not monthly or yearly, just a one time) and videoblocks.com with a yearly subscription if you plan to do many videos going forward. Many professional editors uses Adobe Premiere and Adobe Pro. There are plenty of free royalty free music and sound effect options out there but you want to make sure you can use them for commercial use. That is why I also subscribe to audioblocks.com for audio. But I am a video editor so if you don't want to spend more money, go with the free sites. You can make a professional marketing video even with free resources and editing software. You just have more options with the paid versions.
